Why immigrants come to U.S?

- Work
- To Get a Better Life
- Political Asylum

- My Co-worker: Juana

She came here when she was 17. She is from Peru, but she was raised first in Brazil, then she came to the U.S. Her American dream was initially to become a singer but she didn't achieve it. She has 14 years working for Macy's and she thinks now the American Dream doesn't exist because of the bills she has to pay in order to maintain her medical insurance and she's been doing that for a long time and with risky jobs.

- My Mom: Viri

She is 47 years old and she is from the Dominican Republic. First of all she didn't want to come to U.S because all her belongings were in the Dominican Republic, but she just wanted to give us a good quality of life and a better education and now we are here studying and trying to achieve the dream. She thinks the American Dream is possible.

- My friend: Camen

She is 35 years old. She lives in Brooklyn and she thinks that no matter the difficulties, everything is achievable with hard work in this community and more if you are immigrant because that's why they come, to work hard.

Summary

The American dream continues to tempt world citizens with its promise of financial security and freedom, but many who arrive, sometimes risking their lives to get here, find the actuality rarely matches the dream. For most immigrants, legal or otherwise, if they are not working dangerous, low-paying jobs just to make ends meet, they are suffering from cultural detachment and isolation—sometimes both. Of course, there are exceptions, which accounts for the fact that the American immigrant population continues to grow.
