Introduction

- Education is a crucial component of any effective effort to eliminate child labor.
- Education increases individual earnings
- If workers from poor and rich backgrounds received the same education, disparity between the two in working poverty could decrease by 39%
- Educational attainment explains about half of the difference in growth rates between East Asia and Sub-Saharan Africa between 1965 and 2010.

Finding:

- Almost 70 million children across the world are prevented from going to school each day, a study published today reveals.
- There will be more children out of school than there are today, unless the richest countries dramatically increase the aid they give to the poorest nations.
- Girls are far less likely to attend school than boys in many of the world's poorest countries, the authors have found. In Malawi, of those that enroll, 22.3% of boys complete primary compared to 13.8% of girls. In rural Burkina Faso, 61% of girls are married by the age of 18 and over 85% never get to see the inside of a secondary school.

Why I am Interested

- I was raised in developing nation . Most common thing you find in developing nation is every family fight to live an affordable life with all basic needs. Many family want to educate their children so they will make good money in future. But many just want to make money by sending their children to work and believe that they going to have good money in future and education is waste of money. I believe education is the best investment to a family or to a nation. And this is the truth, we have many examples that educated family have good life as compare to uneducated family in any nation.

Research Question

- Why Education is the best way to end poverty?

Mother ☺

- As she is Pediatricians , she said food insecurity and poor nutrition is due to poverty and unequal distribution of resources, but it is also due to insufficient knowledge of production methods and on nutritional facts. Children who have poor health or who are hungry will not come to school – or their performance will be impaired by poor health and nutrition. Many children in developing countries face severe nutritional and cognitive deficits from the beginning of life.
- Through basic education, marginalized people learn more about health and are better able to protect themselves and their children against diseases.

Rosy

- She says that Increased access to education can contribute to reducing poverty by Acquired basic skills such as reading, writing and numeracy, have a documented positive effect on marginalized populations' incomes. It increases the rate of return on the economy.
- It is therefore important to invest in education that provides children and youth with relevant theoretical and practical skills.

Yadav:

- As his Major is social science he think, Education can prevent the transmission of poverty between generations. And Education also has documented effect on health, nutrition, economic development and on environmental protection.

Main Causes Of Poverty

1ST LACK OF EDUCATION

2ND POOR INFRASTRUCTURE

3RD INEQUALITY

Main effect of poverty

- Homelessness
- Weak agricultural sector
- Low economic growth
- High Volume of inequality

Education Will help

- Create Job
- Growth in nation
- Good Health
- Environmental Protection
